MARKET COMMENTARY

Just over one year ago, most South Africans were worried that the rand would further weaken, as we expected continued political instability, multiple US interest rate hikes (which will be bad for emerging market currencies), a potential SA Debt downgrade and a pedestrian global growth outlook. What we actually experienced was an unexpected result in the UK Brexit vote, Donald Trump and the Republican Party secured the US Presidency, and only one US interest rate hike after growth and employment in the US surged.

Growth expectations also improved from Japan to China and Europe. These factors and the low base in commodity prices caused a rally in value, financial and commodity-based stocks which in turn powered emerging market commodity based currencies ahead (including the SA rand). Who would have believed that the SA rand would gain 22% against the US Dollar and 32% against the UK Pound during the past 13 months?

Domestic investors experienced low single digit returns in Balanced funds over the past year and remain concerned about return expectations after two years (+3.5%) of little appreciation in our local equity market. On the plus side, SA Equities are now a lot cheaper, whilst the recent budget appears to have consolidated an optimistic view from rating agencies. Lower inflation is expected in 2017, which may lead to lower interest rates this year unless the US Federal Reserve spoils the party by increasing rates by more than 0.5% this year.

We remain optimistic about global growth and consumer spending, which should benefit more than 60% of stocks listed in our TOP 40 equity index and are positioned to benefit from any rand weakness from here on in.
